POST-OFFICE NOTICES.

When Correspondence has been mis-sent or delayed (both of which are liable to happen occasionally) all that the addressee need do is to note on the cover, Sent to _____, or Received 7 p.m., or as the case may be, and forward it, rithout any other writing whatever, to the Postmaster-General. This should be acted on the first time cause of complaint occurs; it is a mistake to let such matters pass for fear of tiving trouble, a course which generally gives nore trouble in the end.

LOCAL DELIVERY.—No delivery is attempted on board Ship, at the Peak, Kowloou, Aberdeen, to, nor at any private house (even though named in the address) when there is a place of business nearer, at which delivery can be effected.

The Postal Guide for 1986, revised to date will be found in the Daily Press Directory. p. 385 large edition, p. 701 small edition. This is the only authorised complete Summary of Postal information published in Hongkong.

The authorised List of Mails issued in connection with this paper is the one published twice each day in our Extra, which is always corrected to a much later hour than that given helow.

A SWIMMING LESSON IN VENICE. If the day is warm we shall see plenty of Venetian boys swimming in the canals, wearing nothing but a pair of light trousers, and find no intermediate house of entertainment, they care so little for our approach that we my informant adding : are afraid our gondoles will run over them. PROTECTOR. James Hess makes a very sensible suggestion, it seems to us, in the Herald of Health when he calls attention to the absurdity of our present curious habit of wearing cambric-back vests, while the fronts are of heavy | beheld material and sometimes wadded, and urges the propriety of protection for both sides of the lungs. The habit, of course, has grown from a belief that the outer coat is sufficient protection for the back, while the chest needs warmer covering on account of the coat being open. But it seems a disproval of the reasoning that the first inglessant sensations of horse. You will have to turn-him loose, chillinessare the so-called "creepers" running said the man roughly. down the spine. Even when the warmest woolen material is selected for a suiting, the tailor, unless otherwise ordered, will invariably make the back of the vest of some thin, flimey material, like cambric or silk, though he may deem it advisable to pad the front with cotton wadding. There is no proper reason why the back of the vest should be made so insufficient. The front may be made about five times as much as in the back by briefly as we entered the dwelling : clothing, ribs, flesh, muscle and fat. In the back the lungs almost come to the surface, and therefore need more protection. Mr. Hess asserts that it has been his custom for two years past, and that many gentlemen to whom he has mentioned the matter have had their vests made with good, warm backs, and after a winter's trial are quite enthusiastic

They have passed through the entire winter and spring without once taking cold, which is the best evidence in support of the thick vest-back proposition that could be adduced.

COCO-DE-MER, OR DOUBLE COCOANUT.

The Detroit Free Press says :- Frederick Stearns has on exhibition, at his office in the laboratory, two specimens of the Coco-de-mer. or Double Coconnut, a remarkable fruit of one of the largest and most wonderful palmtrees. They were sent him by the Hon. E. V. Mussey, United States Consul at the Sevchelles, a small group of islands in the Indian Ocean, north of Madagascar. This palmtree, it is stated, attains a height of 100 feet its stem being nearly two feet in diameter, bearing on its summit a crown of fau-shaped leaves. It is remarkable for growing in a socket of a hard, woody texture, perforated with holes made by the roots. This curious appendage derives its origin from the cotyledon, which in the palm attains the extraordinary length of 2 feet, growing downwards dangerous journey. like a root, having the germ seated in its thickened and. When perfect, the thick end opens on one side, like a sheath. In time, the nutriment of the nut becomes exhausted. and the young plant withers. The latter, however, maintains its placental vital connections with the sheath end of the cotyledon, which is henceforth nourished by the plant, and increases in size with its growth, which thus continues seated in the cradle of its birth through life. This formation appears, however to be common to the palms but very much more largely developed in this variety. The fruit is a large oblong nut, covered with a thin rind. After the removal of the outer rind it has the appearance of two oblong nuts firmly united together, often weighing 30 or 40 nounds. They are borne in bunches each consisting of nine or ten nuts, so that a whole banch will often weigh 400 pounds. Ittakes ten years to ripen its fruit, the ablumen of which is similar to that of the common cocoanut, but it is too hard and horny to serve as food. The shall is converted into many useful articles by the natives. The leaves are made into hats, baskets, and the like. The demand of late years has become so great that in order to obtain the leaves the trees are cut down, and, as no care is taken to form new plantations, it was at one time feared this palm would eventually become extinct. In 1864 the leading botanists in England petitioned the Government for its protection. By more recent information, however, it appears that in one island alone there are many thousands of these palm-trees.

The room we entered was long and low, and seemed to serve many purposes, being evidently used as a kitchen, sitting-room and bedroom. The woman I had seen before was stooping over a large iron pot suspended in the wide fireplace, and stirring the contents preparatory to taking them off the fire. She did not notice my entrance by look or sign. but went on with her occupation until her husband, going up to her, made some rapid signs, in obedience to which she left the room. "I have sent Madge out while you put on your dry clothes," he said to me then, and added with a sneer, "Your sleeping chamber is not yet ready for you."
